OVERVIEW

The Master of Social Work (MSW) Work-Linked Degree Program is a specialized graduate program designed for individuals who want to advance their career in social work while continuing to work in the field. This program integrates academic coursework with practical, on-the-job experience, allowing students to directly apply theoretical knowledge to real-world social work settings. Typically, participants maintain employment in a social service agency or related organization throughout the program, which enhances their learning through hands-on practice. The curriculum focuses on developing advanced skills in social work methods, policy analysis, community development, and leadership, with the goal of preparing graduates for leadership roles in diverse social service settings. This work-linked format provides a flexible learning option, enabling professionals to balance career progression with academic achievement.
